

Why Do I Believe God Exists?

Our Existence is Evidence that God Exists

I am not a highly educated scientist. I am just a simple-minded person. Does that mean I cannot know if God really exists since I have never seen Him and do not possess multiple college degrees? Of course not. I can know God exists just using common sense. For example, do I believe that I had a great, great, great, great grandfather? Yes, I do. How? I have never seen him. Common sense tells me I can know he existed because I exist. My existence is proof that I had a great, great, great, great grandfather. How silly would someone be if they made the statement that they had no parents? Even if that person was an orphan and had never met their parents, they could not make that statement. The fact that they exist proves they had parents. So, what about the first human being that ever lived? Who were his parents? He would not have had biological parents. Therefore, he would have to have been created—by whom else but God?

The Big Bang Theory and Evolution Do Not Make Sense

Some scientists try to use their intelligence to convince the world that they know how everything came into existence without God. They tell us that there was a tiny single microorganism that exploded and over billions of years somehow evolved into the universe we see around us today. They use big words and speak in a way that simple-minded people like me could not possibly compete with. Since they are very intelligent and I am not, does that mean they are right? No. The Big Bang Theory and the Theory of Evolution do not make any sense at all. First of all, where did the single microorganism come from? Where did the energy it would take to make this single microorganism explode come from? How can non-life create life? How can something that is a disorderly mess become an orderly functioning universe? How can the universe sustain itself since everything runs down? How can billions of years of time make things that are impossible definite? Why is man so different from animals in that we can talk and reason and look up wondering where we came from? Where did our morality come from? Scientists are unable to answer any of these questions. The only logical conclusion is the creation of the universe happened outside the boundaries of the laws of physics by a force outside of nature--God.

A Higher Law is Evidence that God Exists

I watched a debate between a gospel preacher, Thomas Warren, and a famous atheist, Antony Flew. An excellent point Mr. Warren gave was the annihilation of six million Jews and five million other people by the Nazis. He asked Mr. Flew if what the Nazis did was good or evil. Mr. Flew agreed that Hitler's actions were evil. Mr. Warren asked Mr. Flew who had the authority to decide that killing millions of men, women, and children was evil. German law did not prohibit it. During the Nuremburg trials, the Nazis could not be found guilty under German law since they were just following orders of their government. They also could not be found guilty under U.S. law or British law or Canadian law, etc. because one country is not amenable to another country's law. So, how could the Nazis be found guilty of evil? It was determined that there was a law that was higher than any man's law. This law is what found the Nazis guilty. Who else's law could be higher than man's law except God's law? Amazing! In recent years, Mr. Flew changed his position from being an atheist to a deist. He certainly did not believe in the God of the Holy Bible but did believe in some kind of supernatural force. What seemed to be the deciding factor for him was the discovery of DNA. He admitted that something this complex simply could not be a random accident. Mr. Flew died on April 8, 2010. I wonder what he would tell us now if God allowed him to come back to the earth for just one day?

Why Would Man Invent the Idea of God?

This may not be evidence of the existence of God but is certainly worthy of thinking about. Why would man invent the idea of God? Why would man make God so perfect and superior and make man a weak being? Why would man create a God that would impose rules, regulations, morals, and standards? Why would man create a God that restricts our freedoms to do whatever we please? Why would man create a God that man must bow before and be in subjection to? Why would man create a God that deals out eternal punishment? Man would not and could not have invented the idea of God.